FRENCH FACULTY: A major strength of the Agen program is that it makes extensive use of French law faculty and practitioners to offer lectures on selected topics. Regular lecturers come from the University of Bordeaux, the University of Toulouse as well as the University of Paris. Students are exposed to the study of law in the European fashion where the lecture/discussion mode predominates over the American case presentation method. The American faculty are present and participating when their French colleagues are lecturing.

Professor Sébastien Platon is the French academic director in Agen and will lecture in the program this year. He is a professor of French and European public law at the Université Bordeaux and a member of the Center for Research and European and International Documents. He is a specialist in the law of the European Union.

FIELD TRIPS: Both academic and leisure field trips are being planned as part of the program. Past academic trips have included court observation in both local and national courts (Agen and Paris), “behind the scenes” presentations at the French Senate and National Assembly in Paris, the French Supreme Court and visits to the national judicial school in Bordeaux. Past leisure trips have included visits to the mountains and the Atlantic beaches. As part of the total experience of immersion into the study of law abroad, bi-lingual French law students may also accompany American law students on many field trips and social outings.

JURIDICAL STUDIES CENTER OF AGEN: The university buildings in Agen are quite new (entirely rebuilt and renewed in 1994), accessible to persons with disabilities, and provide spacious classrooms. The Center’s administrative offices are within close proximity of the classrooms and students may contact the Center staff for assistance of any type.

AGEN is located on the Garonne River, in the Aquitaine region. Agen was originally the capital of the Nitriobriges, a Gallic tribe. Later it was made the capital of the county of Agenais. Agen became the seat of a bishopric in the 10th century; construction of the cathedral here was begun during the 12th century. Agen is a rich agricultural area, famous for its prunes (pruneaux d' Agen), renaissance mansions with art museums, and the Saint-Caprais Cathedral. More information on Agen can be found at <http://www.ot-agen.org/eng/visite/visite.htm>

Aquitaine Region: The region's history began thousands of years ago when Cro-magnon man lived in the caves of the Périgord and left cave paintings in sites such as Lascaux and Les Eyzies. More recent remnants of Aquitaine's history date from the time of Eléonore of Aquitaine, consort of Louis VII, King of France. When she married Henry Plantagenet, who became King of England in 1154, she began several centuries of conflict between the French and English for control of Aquitaine. Today, the fortified villages and castles built during this time offer charm to the winding countryside and provide interesting stops along the road.

ACADEMIC CREDIT: For satisfactory participation in the program, participants will receive a Certificate of Completion from NIU College of Law for six hours of credit. Course performance will be evaluated by the NIU faculty in the same manner in which on campus courses are evaluated. The courses taken while participating in this program cannot be audited. For non-NIU students, acceptance of any credit or grade for either course is subject to determination by the student’s home school. Participation in a summer study abroad program is unlikely to accelerate graduation.
